

C.J. Bibus - Teach the essentials of US policy toward its neighbors using the 3 primaries.

Tip: This paragraph is not part of the paper but a quick explanation: This shows an easy and safe way to figure out and answer any question about something that is real (including history) and that changed over time. You cover each primary in chronological order in a separate paragraph. At a minimum, you need to discuss each of the primaries and place them in the context of their time period. At best, you also show how and why something in history changed over time. The word Begin on the next line starts the example of this safe way.

Begin with a brief sentence introducing what the whole paper covers, such as how laws or a part of foreign policy changed from the beginning to the end of the period. (Tip: Write what you would say aloud to another first year student. Be simple.) In this first paragraph, use the earliest primary (the first one in the folder) and at least 1 textbook page for this time period listed in the instructions. Make a correct citation to a textbook page about Primary 1.¹ Make a correct citation to a page of Primary 1.² (Tip: In all paragraphs, write so words make common sense. You may cite the Primary and then its textbook page or vice versa. You may use more than one textbook page or Primary page.)

Make a simple, short transition sentence to introduce the new paragraph and to show how the evidence fits together. In this second paragraph, use Primary 2 and at least 1 textbook page appropriate for Primary 2. Make a correct citation to a page of Primary 2.³ Make a correct citation to a textbook page about Primary 2.⁴

Make another simple, short transition sentence for this paragraph. In this third paragraph, use Primary 3 and at least one textbook page appropriate for Primary 3. Make a correct citation to a page of Primary 3.⁵ Make a correct citation to a textbook page appropriate for the 3rd primary.⁶ Make a simple, short closing sentence on what the whole paper covered. (Cautions: Do not introduce new facts in that closing sentence. Also, make sure all footnotes are on this page. If needed, delete some of your words.)
